Free webinar Nov. 21: How luxury is being redefined and what it means for brands and you

November 17, 2023

Louis Vuitton is often cited as an example of a major luxury brand that has kept with the times, attracting new and younger generation of both aspirational and affluent consumers to its vibrant, color and well-designed merchandise. The brand, as seen with its Colormania effort, is adapting to its customers' wants and desires. Image: Louis Vuitton

By LUXURY ROUNDTABLE INTELLIGENCE

For generations, luxury stood by a standard definition: a high-quality product with impeccable craftsmanship, enviable heritage, stellar positioning, exquisite customer service and limited distribution. The arrival of luxury conglomerates that value scale as much as quality and creativity, a rising aspiring class that devours branded luxury, China's growing clout and a perceptible shift to unique experiences has forced a reconsideration of luxury values.

Not only that, but the third-quarter earnings numbers showed some brands such as Hermès and Brunello Cucinelli as well as LVMH labels pulling ahead, while Kering and Ferragamo lagged in comparison. Clearly, something larger is afoot.

This Luxury Roundtable webinar will focus on:

- How aspirational consumers view luxury goods and services amid with plentiful options in the marketplace? How are the wealthy changing their buying habits, whether it's luxury goods, services, property, yachts or art?
- How should the luxury professional position and adapt as wealthy and UHNW demand more of those who work with them?
- How should luxury brands and retailers meet wealthy consumers where they are? How should they buff their brands for the long-term while minding short-term expectations?
